Mayor Brown explained the situation and spoke as follows:

Gentlemen:—Soon after I took office last June my attention was called to the fact that there were many overhanging signs being maintained in the city streets contrary to the existing ordinances. I took considerable pains to examine these signs on the different streets and came to the conclusion that by far the greater number of them were not only being maintained contrary to the ordinances but were actually either dangerous to the traveling public or objectionable for some other reason. So far as I could learn, no proper permit had been given for the frection of the few signs which were perhaps unobjectionable. Even if if there had been such a permit in the next I take it that under the ordinance if there had been such a permit in the past, I take it that under the ordinance t would be for the present street com-missioner to say whether they might be continued.
